Course Description:

This course provides students with an interdisciplinary approach to the study of cultural and historical experiences of Afro-descendants from the period of the transatlantic slave trade to contemporary political movements in Latin America and the Caribbean. By examining the work of Afro-Latin American leaders, politicians, intellectuals, and artists, the course emphasizes their contributions to the social, economic and cultural development of their countries while promoting social change and debating a transnational diasporic identity. Students will also have the opportunity to develop critical vocabulary for speaking, reading, and writing about Afro-Latin American literature, and to practice different approaches to ongoing debates by means of research, presentation techniques, and academic writing. The course is taught in Spanish.

COVID-19 Statement

All students in face-to-face classes are required to wear masks during class, and students must sanitize their own workstations upon entering the classroom. Taking these measures supports the safety and protection of the FAU community. Students who do not adhere to these rules will be asked to leave the classroom and/or be removed from the course. Students experiencing flu-like symptoms (fever, cough, shortness of breath), or students who have come in contact with an infected person should immediately contact FAU Student Health Services (561-297-3512).

Methodology:

This course is taught using a student-centered approach to promote self-reflection, diversity awareness, and enhance awareness of student's critical thinking and collaborative skills. This approach emphasizes (a) providing meaningful and comprehensible input to learners, (b) establishing the role of the student as an active participant in the learning process, and (c) focusing on questions related to social justice and racial equity as the foundation for class discussions. As a student in this class, your primary tasks are (a) to complete all readings and assignments before coming to class; (b) to participate actively and enthusiastically in classroom activities and discussions; (c) to contribute to the generation of collective knowledge regarding the course's topics.

Learning Outcomes

When students complete this course, they will

- be able to recognize the major concerns of Afro-Latin American writers: the construction of Black subjectivities; the representation of race and racial identities; the impact of racial constructions on everyday experiences in Latin America; and the intimate interplay of gender, class, sexuality, and race in the formation of modern identities.
- be able to recognize and interpret the political role and cultural impact of Afro-descendants in the shaping of Latin American cultural history.
- be able to analyze and compare different cultural traditions in Latin America, and the way such traditions were challenged by artists and writers of African descent.
- be able to use a sophisticated vocabulary about political, social, economic, cultural, and environmental issues in Latin America, with a special emphasis on literature, film and visual arts depicting racial and social stereotypes.
- be able to use analytical and argumentative skills through written assignments, oral reports, leading discussions, and essays so that the student can apply their knowledge to specific social and cultural topics raised during the course.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS:Attendance and Participation

This class requires the attendance and active participation of all students. Class participation includes participating in discussions, in-class workshops, leading a discussion, reporting on one's own on-going paper research, tying readings together, summarizing readings and other in-class activities. Postings to Canvas about a class discussion also count as participation. All contributions should reflect an attentive reading of all assigned texts. This means that students should formulate their own thoughts, questions and analysis; and it also means listening actively to others and responding to them.

You may miss no more than 1 class without penalty; after one unjustified absence, the participation grade drops 10%. Late work will not be accepted except in extraordinary circumstances. If you are unable to come to class, you are responsible for making up missed work. If you miss an in-class assignment, contact me as soon as possible for a make-up. Except in exceptional circumstances (such as illnesses, accidents or family crises), I will not accept late any work that has been assigned in advance on the syllabus. Finally, chronic tardiness will affect your participation grade.

Leading discussions

Each student will have the opportunity to prepare the readings of a particular class meeting and help guide the discussion throughout the class. In order to prepare the discussion properly, please keep in mind that the focus should always be to provide a critical and informed analysis of the readings. You should set up the discussion by bringing meaningful questions to the class while doing your best to promote a lively exchange of ideas. More details to follow.

Reports

Students are responsible for preparing all reading and writing assignments prior to class. Each student will write two reports on select theoretical texts. Reports will not exceed 2 pages, and it will demonstrate the student’s capacity to reflect briefly on preceding (and future) class discussions. All of the reports should be typewritten and double-spaced with one-inch margins and 12-point Times New Roman font. Late reports will not be accepted unless the student presents valid documentation. Otherwise, the grade will result in a 0.

Essays

Students are to write two essays throughout the semester (Essay 1: 8 pages; Essay 2: 15 pages, not including footnotes and works cited according to the MLA style). Please turn in both essays on the day indicated on the syllabus. No deadline extensions will be accepted unless otherwise indicated. Prior to submitting the final essay, the student is expected to hand in an abstract to me well before the essay’s due date.
